

FOREIGN & INTERNATIONAL LAW WEBSITES

(current as of Oct. 2007)

Foreign law usually means the law of another nation not one's own. It is sometimes mistaken for international law, which is the law between or among nations that have expressly or tacitly agreed to be bound by it. (For more on this important distinction, please read the ASIL Insights article cited below.) The following websites were handpicked for their authoritativeness, currentness, importance, and/or usefulness. They include governmental and nongovernmental organizations (NGOs); radio, television, and print media; special interest groups and blogs; education and law directories; legal research and citation guides; and companies selling language-learning products. And they are free—or mostly free—to access. This list is not meant to be exhaustive, but selective. Please feel free to recommend complementary websites to Roy L. Sturgeon, Foreign & International Law Librarian, rsturgeon@tourolaw.edu.
